brewing was taken out when the harvest was over and pounded in stone mortars with long heavy pestals.

kettles-which would be called mash tubs today. Some brewers boiled the grain whole, but usually the powdered barley was used as it yielded a richer stock.

Then the powdered grain was boiled in large

The Ancient Egyptians understood fermentation. They practiced it in brewing, by putting pieces of leavened bread into the barley juice and allowing it to stand in huge jars. Hops were unknown, but the lupin, shirret or roots of an Assyrian plant used to give tang and snap to the Zythus.

The fine flavor and wholesomeness of Hanleys Ale is due to the use of superior barley malt, selected hops and modern hygienic brewing processes.

THERE'S nothing so satisfying in summer as Clicquot Club Ginger Ale, especially when one is heated. Its delicate, thirst-quenching taste (without the throat-burning qualities of other ginger ales) and its purity and wholesomeness make it popular with both men and women. It mildly stimulates, leaving one refreshed and satisfied.

Only the best ingredients go into Clicquot Club—the best extra grade of granulated cane sugar, choice ginger soot—the oils of select itmes and lemons. The water — crystal-clear and pure, from the deep Clicquot Springs—is noted for its fine carbonating quality. "Clicquot Club Ginger Ale" is as good as ginger ale can be. There are no preservatives or chemical preparations used
